Ikuno Ward's History

Kuno Ward in Brief

Culturally, the Ikuno Ward area is home to a legacy and history dating back to the Manyo era (7th century AD).

The ward name "Ikuno" is drawn from the tale of the "Chieftain of Ikuno" associated with Prince Shotoku (Shotoku Taishi, a historical figure from the sixth century). Ikuno Ward Flower: Hydrangea Furthermore, Katsuyama Kofun (a burial mound) is located to the east of the Ward Office, and although not definite, it is held to be the tomb of feudal lord Obase-no-Mikoto. It is said that the name of the place shifted from "Okayama" to "Okatsuyama" (meaning victory mountain) due to Tokugawa Hidetada's victory here in the winter campaign of the siege of Osaka in 1614. The region still holds true to its cultural traditions, including danjiri processions and Jizo festivals, forming a wealth of human experience and retaining the charms of the old downtown.

Crigin of the Ward Name

Ikuno Ward was created from the former villages of Tsuruhashi in Tosei District, Ikuno, and Shoji when Osaka shifted to a 22 ward structure with the general restructuring of administrative districts in Japan on April 1, 1943.

Subsequently, it incorporated the town of Tatsumi in Naka-Kawachi district during a merger of six towns and villages, bringing it to its present form.

In the vicinity of the bell of "Sharisonsho-ji" in the 1-2 district area of Shariji, we can find an inscription of a tale said to be related to the Ward's origins.

According to the tale, about 1300 years ago, a proud person known as the "Ikuno Choja" once lived in the area. The Choja or chief had a child, but the child would not speak.

But then, Shotoku Taishi happened to be at Shitennoji, and said to the child, "you don't know this, but you were entrusted with relics of the Buddha before you were born.

Return them now." The child spat out three relics of the Buddha, and Shotoku Taishi took one to the temple Horyu-ji in Nara, another to the temple Shitennoji in Osaka, and handed the third to the Ikuno Choja. The child began to speak from that time onward, which pleased the Choja so much that he built a Buddhist temple himself. The ward's inception drew inspiration from the tale of the Ikuno Choja, resulting in the name Ikuno Ward.
